Washington bureau - Federal land use plan dooms 'home rule' concept chington bureau—Federal land use Local governments in the United States of America began assuming planning and zoning powers late in the 18th Ceatury. In the interests of seeing their towns and cities develop in an orderly way, property owners by and large have accepted this intrusion into their traditional rights to use a piece of land for whatever purpose they chose. We are reaching a point, however, where land use controls are spinning a web around property rights in a way that surely would have appalled our grandfathers.

City and county governments are yielding to pressure to surrender their planning and zoning powers to regional bodies.
Many states, California among them, have placed the control of development of at least part of their land in the hands of state agencies. Predictably, the federal government is next Legislation is moving through the Strd Congress that will make the question of what happens to the vacant lot at the end of our block an issue of national policy.
The proposed Land Use Policy and Planning Assistance Act, which has bipartisan support, has the einnocent outlines of a progressive piece of environmental legislation, with the customary price tag of federal funds. It would distribute $100 million a year to state governments to encourage them to adopt statewide land use policies and see that they are enforced. With that kind of impetus for distant, centralized planning and soning authority, the historic local responsibility in the field appears doomed, not to mention what might remain of the rights of the individual property owner.

This might be the time for citizens to draw back and consider how far they want to go in creating government agencies to hold sway over the use of land. What exactly is the deed to a piece of property going to mean when of property going to mean when there is an environmental policeman on every corner, possibly in a federal uniform? The question is as much a philosophic as a political one.

one as a political one.

The environmentalists argue that land can no longer be considered as only a commodity to be bought, sold and used freely within the framework of a community plan. It must be "managed" in the public interest, the way we mankge our water and mineral resources to conserve them and assure they will serve the public good. Granted that pell-mell growth and development can be ruinous, are the American people and their local governments really so irresponsible that they must conjure up a presumably wiser Big Brother to decide how they will use their land?

Our towns and cities are will use their land?

Our towns and cities are already bowing to the dictates of the state and federal governments to clean up their air and water. Those environmental problems are considered too big and too serious—too "regional"—to be left to local action. At the rate we're going, the day will come when we have to apply to Congress for building permits.

New York experimenting with tough counter-attack against narcotics

Vork experimenting with tough CO Narcotics traffic probably has taken a greater toll in New York City than anywhere in America. It is the major factor behind a shameful crime rate. It helps perpetuate a huge welfare burden.
With an addict population entimated as high as 300,000, New York provides a grim example of how drugs can change the character of an entire city.
Finally, New York is striking back at its drug problem in a way that promises to have an immediate and telling effect. A tough new set of penalties for narcotics violations has just taken effect under laws passed by the New York legislature at the prompting of Gov.
Nelson Rockefeller.
A person convicted of selling an

A person convicted of selling an ounce or more of heroin, for in-stance, will face a mandatory life sentence with a requirement that a minimum of 15 years be served in prison before he becomes eligible for parole. Possession of hard drugs also will bring stiffer sentences. New York now will have the most rigorous drug laws of any state in the nation.

A promising aspect of this crackdown is that it is supported by officials of most addict treatment centers in the city. They believe the impact on the availability of drugs will help force addicts into treatment programs and persuade them to stay. Police, of course, hope to see less of the plea bargaining, quick parole and other compromises which have blunted the effect of their law enforcement efforts.

This example may be profitable

This example may be profitable to lawmakers and judges in other states and cities which in varying degrees face the same problem as New York.

We are sorry to see that the pro-We are sorry to see that the program to discourage cultivation of the opium poppy in Turkey is becoming an issue in that country's election next-month. Some political leaders are claiming that the sacrifice being made by Turkish farmers is having no impact on the world's supply of illicit heroin, since the opium poppy from which it is derived is being grown in generous quantities elsewhere.

That misses the point of the Turkish program. If farmers there can be induced to switch to crops that do not generate human misery, it holds out the hope that the same kind of approach can be effective in other countries. However, the big problem will still remain — pressuring the governments of Communist China and others in the "golden triangle" of Southeast Asia to lend their aid-to similar programs. similar programs.

Search for Loch Ness monster may end one of world's favorite games

We take our stand with those cotsmen who are objecting to the plan of some Japanese scientists to go hunting for the Loch Ness monster in a midget submarine. The scientists say all they want to do is take the monster's picture, not capture it and haul it away, but the whole scheme still has us

The second second

One of these days a scientific expedition will do too thorough a job of searching for the Loch Ness monster. It will either come up with a picture, or with irrefutable proof that the monster does not exist. Either way, one of the world's favorite guessing games would be over. Well, there's always the Abominable Snowman.

The new dental clinic of the Southern Illinois Uni-versity at Edwardsville School of Dental Medicine is serving the public while providing for the educa-tional needs of the

The clinic opened Sept. 6 with nearly 200 persons seeking dental treatment. Second year students of the dental school have opportunities for practical training while learning to provide comprehensive patient care.

Located on the Alton campus at College Ave, and Annex St., the clinic is open from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 1 to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday, with the exception of holidays and break periods between academic years. Free parking is available for patients at the University is tat Worden and Leverett streets.

Fees are comparable to the charges made at public clinics operated by other dental schools.

Each prospective patient is diagnosed to determine it treatment needs are within the capability of the students. The students assume the responsibility of developing a total health care package for the patient and implementing prevention, diagnosis and treatment that best

The clinic has 57 general dentistry teaching cubicles of various design to insure greatest flexibility in the teaching program. Forty-one of the cubicles are of the standard rectangular design, and the rest are designed for specialized activities. Some of the cubicles provide the trudent with a semi-private area for patient consultation to simulate an office environment.

All of the treatment procedures are supervised by professional members of the dental school faculty. Because of the unique arrangement of the cubicles one staff member is able to supervise the work of four students. Certified dental assistants also work with students during clinical procedures.

The SIUE School of Dental Medicine opened with its first class of 24 students in September, 1972, and this year's beginning class, which reported Sept. 4, numbers 40. Students must complete one year of academic work before they begin the clinical program.
